A treasure for the ages

Westcliff is one of the oldest suburbs in Johannesburg. Most houses in the area were built by the Randlords, who made their fortunes from gold. They were known for their lavish entertaining and eccentricities. This property is a heritage site and is distinguishable by the signature Georgian Style Architecture. When the family approached us to furnish their new home, they wanted to use some of their existing furniture to create a homely, casual, country space. As a young design studio, there was a bit of doubt as to whether we could deliver on the task of keeping the space simple yet elegant. The assumption is that young designers are very modern, but we managed to capture the essence of what the family desired.

We chose to use woody textures, complemented by simple yet eye-catching pieces. The colour scheme of browns and whites gives the home an earthy and ground nature, making it warm and inviting. It's a home for living in, and we ensured that we encapsulated a laid back family experience, leaving room for them to tell their stories about each space.
